Kiss paper checks goodbye

You deserve a payment solution that doesn’t leave you waiting and wondering.

xoxo LawPay

Paper checks are notoriously unreliable.
They get lost in the mail, they get tossed in the laundry, and they carry a lot of sensitive information around with them wherever they go.

LawPay changes all of that. Give your clients the flexibility to pay you from anywhere, anytime.
Most importantly, we ensure you stay in compliance with ABA and IOLTA guidelines.

OKE OF THE MANY RESPONSIBILITIES the president of the bar association is tasked with is writing a president’s message for the bar journal each month. By and large, it is probably the most dreaded job the president has – that and the appointment of the chair and vice chair of the bar’s 22 standing committees.

This is my final president’s message, and interestingly, I’ve really enjoyed writing them. As with anything, some have been more fun to write than others. Some messages have been somewhat obligatory in their content. I haven’t enjoyed those as much; however, I just try to find ways to make them more fun to read. It’s definitely been a challenge.

My year as president of the OBA is almost over. As I’ve said many times before, there’s an old saying in bar association circles that as bar president, the year you plan and the year you get are two different things.

As I’ve said many times before, there’s an old saying in bar association circles that as bar president, the year you plan and the year you get are two different things. You want a quiet year that is productive.

What I’ve actually experienced is a year in which I, along with every member of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, Board of Governors and our executive director, have been sued by one of our members. Quoting from the joint status report filed with the court in the case, “The plaintiff is licensed to practice law in the State of Oklahoma. He challenged the State of Oklahoma’s requirement that he join and pay dues to the Oklahoma Bar Association as a condition of practicing law in the state. In his Third Claim for Relief, he alleged that – to the extent that mandatory bar membership and dues are constitutional – the State has not provided sufficient safeguards to ensure that attorneys’ mandatory dues are not used for political and ideological speech and other activities that are not germane to the bar’s regulatory purpose, as required by constitutional law.”

As defendants, we moved to dismiss the plaintiff’s amended complaint. The court partially granted the motions, dismissing plaintiff’s first and second claims for relief upon concluding that U.S. Supreme Court precedent approves mandatory bar membership and dues.

Regarding the plaintiff’s surviving third claim for relief, as defendants, the OBA contends that the OBA’s procedures for handling member objections to the OBA’s expenditures of dues comply with the First Amendment. We also contend that the OBA’s procedures are constitutionally sufficient.

The case is now beginning its discovery phase.

Our premier event of the summer, the Solo & Small Firm Conference, was flooded out of its original destination in Tulsa in June and had to move to another location. It turned out swimmingly, if you will, thanks to the efforts of our bar staff. They did an amazing job of moving to another location on an extremely short

There can also be trepidation as one contemplates an unknown future, and it can involve mixed emotions for someone like a new law school graduate who really preferred to obtain employment to begin their career, but for whatever reason did not. It can even be tinged with regret for the lawyer who has departed an established law firm that dissolved or who was terminated from employment.

The daunting thing for lawyers, trained to rely on precedent to predict the future, is that these nuts and bolts differ from what they were a few decades or even a few years ago. A successful business model established in 2019 may be considered dated in 2029.

Your attention is first directed to the OBA Management Assistance Program’s Opening Your Law Practice resource page at www.okbar.org/oylp. Among the many resources, there is a document titled “First Steps in Building Your New Law Firm” prepared by myself and a fellow practice management advisor with the District of Columbia Bar for ABA TECHSHOW 2016. This 65-page document includes a sample business plan and other resources.

THE PRACTICE AREAS

The lawyer or group of lawyers leaving an existing firm will probably start with some existing clients and a good idea of the practice area focus. The lawyer leaving a firm where all the clients will be staying with the firm or the new lawyer opening a practice will face establishing a practice area focus. I have talked to many law students who say they want to establish an estate planning or other transactional practice. I sometimes wonder if it is because they really don’t want to go to court. In my view, it would be quite challenging to establish an economically viable practice of only drafting simple estates and trusts because individuals with a high net worth will gravitate toward established lawyers and law firms.

The new lawyer will likely begin with clients hiring a lawyer for the first time, including those who are referred to you by friends and family to handle personal problems. This means matters like family law, guardianship, criminal defense, business or employment disputes and consumer bankruptcy. Determine which matters you will handle on your own and which require co-counsel or a referral. Some estate planning and contract drafting can round out the new law practice but will likely not form the foundation of it. Being a “courthouse lawyer” also increases your visibility in the legal community which can result in more business.

THE TEAM

A group of lawyers leaving a firm probably has a good idea of who they need to hire. Receptionists, secretaries, legal assistants, bookkeepers and law office administrators are all potential law firm hires.

Even a solo practitioner who intends not to hire any full-time employees needs to assemble a team. Having someone available to answer the telephone and schedule appointments with potential new clients when you are unavailable is important. Even one who starts their practice with just a cellphone will want to consider using a virtual receptionist service when it is affordable. Hiring someone with no previous law office experience to answer the phone is workable where there are other employees in the firm who can provide some structure and answer the person’s questions. The person answering the phone on your behalf represents your law firm and a virtual receptionist will likely be best. In addition, this avoids payroll tax obligations which can be time consuming. You can also locate virtual legal assistants, if needed.

This does not mean that a real person, particularly one with previous law office experience, is not the best situation if you can afford this. My first year in solo/small firm practice I hired a young lady who had never worked in a law office before. She was soon replaced by an experienced legal assistant who in many ways provided me more training than law school, but today there are many great and affordable virtual assistance services.

THE PHYSICAL TOOLS

You need telephones – a good smartphone and a landline. Some would say you no longer need a landline, but you want to be listed in the local telephone directory and directory assistance so people can find you. You can re-evaluate that later.

A computer is an obvious necessity. For solo and small firm lawyers, I advise them to spend the extra money for a laptop so they can use it for working at home and on the road. Computers are relatively inexpensive now, so it is best not to work from a home computer shared by other family members.

A scanner is a very good investment. Certainly, you can scan a page or two with an app on your smartphone, but the first time you need to scan a 25-page document you will be glad you have a scanner. For many years now, I have recommended the Fujitsu ScanSnap line for a desktop scanner. Just go online and find the best price for the ScanSnap iX1500. I prefer that everyone have a scanner and printer within reach of their desk, so time is not wasted getting up to scan or pick up something off the printer.

You may also need a copier, but a computer with a scanner and printer can make quick copies. Solo and small firms may want to start with an inexpensive copier and see whether they need one with more capacity. Law firms still generate a lot of paper, but there is a wide variation between law firms on how many copies, depending on the practice areas. Know where the closest local copy service is located for big projects.

If you do much mailing, a postage meter and scale will avoid wasting postage because you are not sure of the correct amount. There are alternatives to the USPS today.

SOFTWARE TOOLS AND SERVICES

Office 365
You will want to subscribe to Office 365 Business Premium at $12.50 per user per month for an annual commitment. This will provide you with Outlook, Word, Excel, PowerPoint installed on your machine plus several other tools that are available when you log in. Assuming you have a good internet connection, you can then use OneDrive for storing your documents and other files.

A Practice Management Solution
Picking your practice management software solution is a critical decision because you will be using this tool all day every day as you practice law. Others may tell you this is an optional decision or to wait until you have several open files or sufficient cash flow, but they are wrong. Clio, CosmoLex, MyCase, PracticePanther, RocketMatter and ZolaSuite are recognized as OBA member benefits and you can log into MyOKBar and click “Practice Management Software Benefits” to learn more about these tools and to see OBA member discounts. There are other good tools not on this list and we may be expanding it soon.

Your practice management solutions are an important tool in managing your practice allowing you to combine billing, timekeeping, client file organization and many other important features under one dashboard. It is especially important for lawyers beginning a brand new practice to start off right using these tools and to learn how to use them well while you may be less busy with client matters in the initial months of your practice. Think of these tools as the personal assistant that works for a very cheap monthly fee and never takes a day off.

Some would say you no longer need a landline, but you want to be listed in the local telephone directory and directory assistance so people can find you.
PDF Manipulation Tools

Lawyers on a budget can defer this purchase for a while. Ideally, you should choose between Adobe Acrobat Pro DC at $179.88 per year or Nuance PDF Converter Professional 8 at $179.99 for a license (not an annual subscription).

It is true that Adobe Reader is free and Word, Excel and PowerPoint will print to PDF. The ScanSnap will scan to PDF. There are other free and less expensive PDF manipulation tools. The Adobe and Nuance Standard products are a little less expensive but do not include the advanced tools of the pro versions. Soon you will want to do advanced PDF functions like redaction, Bates stamping and combining multiple PDFs into one. Not only do you want a tool that can do “everything,” but also one with many online tutorials and guides.

Accounting Software

Your CPA will probably suggest you use QuickBooks. There are many other alternatives including FreshBooks and Xero. Billing is included in your practice management solution and CosmoLex contains accounting tools. Trust accounting is covered in another feature in this bar journal. Unless you have a lot of accounting entries, you may not prioritize this purchase either. Ultimately, you will probably do what your CPA tells you to do if you wish to work with a CPA.

Fastcase

Your firm may need to subscribe to a commercial legal research service. The OBA does provide you with a free Fastcase subscription, which you can access via MyOKBar. We strongly suggest you go to fastcase.com and watch some of the training videos and sign up for their free webinars.

THE OFFICE

If a solo doesn’t feel he or she can commit to the overhead for monthly office rental or only intends to work part-time, then a home office may be the right choice. Before you put your home address on a publicly filed court pleading, figure out which post office is closest to you and also investigate the private mailbox services near you. One of the biggest advantages of renting space from another law firm or having paid staff is having a person to sign for certified mail and deliveries. If you cannot have that, it is best to just make a habit of stopping by the post office every day, but no price can be placed on personal security. Whether it is the inconvenience of clients stopping by your house at all hours of the night or something more dangerous, have a law firm address that is not your home address.

You also have to know yourself. If you have a large family or roommates at home, it may be worth the expense to go to work and focus on that in another location every day. Ironically, working from home often works better for the veteran lawyer who has left the big firm and is focusing on a few long-term clients than the new lawyer trying to get established.
Solo practice can be isolating. It is good to have other lawyers to discuss ideas. It is good to have other people to talk to, so explore office suite locations and see if a law firm might rent you an office. Always own your own phone number.

It is hard to do justice to the challenge of picking the perfect office location in just a few short sentences. If you will have many court appearances each week, you probably want to be within walking distance of the courthouse. That’s simple for lawyers in most of the county seats, but in Oklahoma City and Tulsa, having to find and pay for parking may be a barrier for many consumer clients. A lawyer focusing on consumer bankruptcy, for example, may choose a location away from downtown on a well-known street with a parking lot with free parking. There are so many variables associated with this decision, including what’s available, that you may just have to accept you may not find a perfect situation.

Unless you have a very healthy budget, shop around for some decent gently used furniture if you are just getting started, but invest in a new, sturdy and comfortable office chair for yourself.

ONLINE MARKETING

You will need a traditional website and a business Facebook page. Spend some time searching for domain names with credit card in hand. It is far better to purchase two or three domain names you end up not using than to “think over” purchasing one and then come back to find it is now mysteriously in the control of a reseller.

Version one of your website need not be an award winner. You want it up before you send out that first email proudly using the domain name of your website as your official email address.

THAT’S NOT NEARLY EVERYTHING

There are many other items associated with opening and operating a law firm because you are not only practicing law, but also running a business enterprise. You need to develop and maintain good personal habits. You need to seek out mentors and advisors and develop your referral network. You will definitely want to talk to our friends at Oklahoma Attorney’s Mutual Insurance Co. about professional liability insurance. These are enough of the nuts and bolts to open the doors.

SAFEGUARDING CLIENT FUNDS and property is an important duty. Trust account management is simple and yet honest lawyers sometimes find themselves in disciplinary peril because they did not pay appropriate attention to their trust account.

The Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct require a lawyer to hold property of clients or third persons separate from the lawyer’s own property. This means retainers and flat fees, filing fees, deposition and expert witness expenses as well as settlement proceeds should go into a trust account until distribution. These funds are required to be deposited in an interest on lawyer trust account (IOLTA). The interest earned on IOLTAs are pooled and transferred to the Oklahoma Bar Foundation.

The fiduciary nature of the attorney-client relationship and the need for public confidence in the legal profession require lawyers to maintain trust accounts with the utmost accuracy. Because of this, one of the requirements under Rule 1.15 (l) is that financial institutions must report any overdrafts of IOLTAs to the Oklahoma Bar Association’s Office of General Counsel.

It is very important for lawyers to maintain accurate records and to balance their trust accounts monthly. Frequently, lawyers go into private practice thinking more about their representation of clients rather than the business side of the practice. As a matter of fact, it’s quite common to hear lawyers joke that they went to law school because they couldn’t do math. When it comes to trust accounts, the math is no joking matter. Lawyers failing to properly safeguard the funds entrusted to them by their clients could adversely affect their license to practice law.

Simple negligence accounts for many trust account violations. Lawyers need to realize they are responsible for their trust accounts. One memorable story is where a California lawyer received notice from the State Bar of California accepting his resignation from the bar. The only problem is that he never resigned. An investigation revealed his trusty and loyal secretary had embezzled $265,000 from his trust account over a five-year period. She was so efficient that she kept him unaware of client complaints and bar disciplinary proceedings by intercepting phone calls, filing responses and requesting delays. Finally, when she was unable to fake his appearance at a deposition, she agreed, on his behalf, to resign and forged his signature on the resignation. The lawyer spent over $250,000 in restitution and legal fees to remedy the situation but was still suspended by the bar.

“Simple oversight and minimal diligence would have prevented this lawyer’s problem.”

More recently, The Florida Bar suspended a lawyer for three years when a bookkeeper she hired embezzled $150,000 out of her trust account from April 2016 through June 2017. The lawyer’s husband referred a new bookkeeper to her and so she trusted his judgment and did not run a background check. If the lawyer would have run a background check, she would have found out her new bookkeeper was a convicted felon for theft. The lawyer also apparently never bothered to check her trust account for over a year. When the smoke cleared, the lawyer divorced her husband, lost her license to practice law and had to pay back the embezzled funds and $8,261 in costs. These types of stories make it clear that a lawyer must be active in reviewing and reconciling their trust accounts. As a matter of fact, a lawyer or small firm should review their online statement each month and, if they still receive their bank statement by paper, they should require it to be delivered to them unopened so the lawyer can review it personally.
RECORDKEEPING AND THREE-WAY RECONCILIATION

Normal two-way reconciliation of the checking account is where one compares the bank statement with the check register. Not everyone today compares their personal check register with their bank statement or even keeps a check register, but this is an important practice for the lawyer’s business accounting records and required practice for trust accounting. It is admittedly rare that a bank will make a mathematical error today but because humans are involved, it is not impossible. It is more important today that the bank statement is carefully reviewed to timely catch any instances of fraud.

Unlike other types of businesses, lawyers need to keep trust ledgers for each client or matter in order to do three-way reconciliations. To perform three-way reconciliations, the lawyer first maintains a “check book register” tracking all deposits, disbursements and service charges. The prior month’s ending balance is the starting point and those times are added or deducted to arrive at the current month’s ending balance. For this to match the bank statement balances, adjustments will generally be made for items such as outstanding checks and deposits that have yet to clear the account. Finally, and most importantly, the lawyer should then total all the individual client ledger balances and compare this to the ledger balance for the trust account. The bank statement, checkbook balance and the total of the clients’ ledgers should all match.

For the larger firm with many lawyers, a more rigid set of processes may be adopted to make certain that staff properly handles the trust account transactions under the supervision of the lawyers. These steps may include additional recordkeeping not noted below. For the smaller firm with no staff or the practitioner who chooses not to delegate any trust accounting management to staff, I have outlined a few simple steps below to make certain trust accounting can be done efficiently and without errors.

TRUST ACCOUNTING TOOLS

The OBA Management Assistance Program staff prefers software tools that will expedite the lawyer’s handling of the trust account. Several of these tools have been recognized as OBA member benefits including TrustBooks and several practice management solutions that provide appropriate trust accounting. The OBA member benefits offer a free trial period so lawyers can test out their products. Visit the Practice Management Software Benefits link on MyOKBar for additional information.

Lawyers can also use generic accounting software such as QuickBooks. The challenge is that most generic tools are not designed for the unique requirements of attorney trust accounting and these products may be too complex for those with no experience or training. They may also allow you to “overdraw” the account or a client ledger where software designed for trust accounting software will not. To learn more about setting up a trust account with QuickBooks, attorney Cheryl Clayton’s article in the August 2017 Oklahoma Bar Journal titled “Using QuickBooks for IOLTA Trust Accounting” is a good resource.

Accounting “by hand” using preformatted forms or electronic equivalents is an option that may work for small firms and solo practitioners. Preparing ledgers and reconciliations by hand is time consuming and system safeguards against human error are limited. Regardless, a lawyer must understand how trust accounting practices would be accomplished if done manually.

UNDERSTANDING THREE-WAY RECONCILIATION

Records

The required records to adequately reconcile a trust account are 1) a checkbook register where a lawyer keeps track of all deposits and disbursements along with a running balance of the total monies in the account, 2) individual ledgers for each client’s deposits, disbursements and running balances, 3) a monthly reconciliation form that the lawyer will complete 12 times per year and 4) a monthly bank statement from the financial institution where the trust account is maintained. Today many bank statements are delivered electronically, but for lawyer’s records, these monthly payments must be retained in the lawyer’s records either saved as a PDF file or printed on paper. The lawyer never wants to be in a position of requiring old bank account records to respond to a grievance and learning that there will be a “research fee” and delay or that the previous bank is now in receivership and there will be problems obtaining these old records.

Record Keeping

Many have discussed the need for mindfulness in a lawyer’s daily life and some lawyers practice meditation for self-care. Any time a lawyer is dealing with their trust account, it is suggested that the lawyer first take a deep breath and then proceed slowly and deliberately with the attitude that handling client funds is one of the lawyer’s most sacred and important duties. Do not let the press of other business cause you to rush through trust account transactions.

1) When processing a deposit to the trust account, such as a retainer fee, cost deposit or settlement proceeds, first enter the amount and date in the checkbook register and reference either the client name or client name and matter (e.g., “Retainer from Bob Jones” or “Settlement proceeds in Bob Jones v. Smith”). Then total the new running balance of the trust account. For example, if the lawyer had $17,000 in the trust account and deposited $2,000, the new balance would be $19,000 but these numbers will rarely be round numbers and it is suggested a calculator or software tool be used to minimize math errors. Do this twice because one can make an error entering numbers into a calculator.

2) Then immediately go to the client’s ledger sheet, enter the deposit and date and compute the running balance. Again, do it twice. This is simple: Bob Jones Retainer $5000 Balance $5000

   If this is the client’s initial deposit to the trust account, the lawyer will need to create a new ledger sheet for the client identifying the client by name and perhaps referencing the client matter.

   Even though it may seem obvious that the first entry on the client’s ledger from the client is a retainer fee, you want to develop the good habit of always identifying the source of and reason behind every deposit. These notes may be useful in jogging the attorney’s memory later and will be invaluable if the lawyer is under some sort of temporary disability and the court has appointed someone to manage the lawyer’s trust account or others in the firm are assisting.

3) With checks and other disbursements, the process is similar, but it proceeds in the opposite order. Before writing a check or approving another type of disbursement, the lawyer first consults the client’s ledger to make certain there are sufficient funds on behalf of the client to satisfy the intended payment.

4) Then enter this transaction in the client ledger, referencing a check number if there is one and providing the reason for the payment, payee, amount and date (e.g., 11/11/2019 Tulsa County Court Clerk – Bob Smith Filing Fees – Case number if available and amount). Then compute the client’s new running balance (which must always be a positive number). We still suggest doing the calculation twice or double-checking the math.

5) Next, go to the checkbook register and enter all of this information again. Calculate the new balance of total funds on deposit in your trust account, as always, double-checking your math.

The above steps cover each transaction, but there are a few more periodic duties to assure complete compliance with the lawyer’s ethical duties and give the lawyer the ability to “close the books” on the trust account each month.

It is a good idea to review all of your trust account transactions each week just to make sure that everything is in order, but a monthly review is required. The Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct do not state that you must balance your trust account each month, but if you do not do this and there is an error that is not caught for several months, it can be problematic to find and fix the error. If there are multiple errors that are not found over months or years, this can create a nightmare scenario perhaps requiring a forensic accounting investigation. In addition, if you find yourself in a situation where there is an ethics investigation and discipline is being considered, there is a huge difference between a situation where an innocent error was found by the lawyer and corrected long ago versus a situation where the trust account is in disarray and many hours of accounting review are now required to determine the exact status.

Once you determine that the bank statement balance, checkbook register balance and the total of the clients’ ledgers all match, you note that in your records and your trust accounting tasks for the month are completed.

It should also be noted that a lawyer comingling their personal funds in a trust account is an ethical violation, but Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct Section 1.15 (h)(4) allows a lawyer to keep some funds in the trust account to pay bank service charges or credit card processing fees. A ledger should be kept to track that balance just like a client ledger. Many IOLTA-friendly banks will not charge monthly service fees on that account. Credit card fees vary depending on the service. OBA member benefit LawPay can be set up to debit any credit card processing charges from the lawyer’s operating account, simplifying trust accounting.

Three-Way Reconciliation

As noted previously, three-way reconciliation means that on the date each month the lawyer or law firm selects, it is determined that the total of all client balances held in the trust account equals the balance listed on the bank statement (or other online bank records) with adjustments made for items such as outstanding checks and deposits that have yet to clear the account and on the checkbook register. The form below can assist with that task and can be found on the OBA Management Assistance Program’s Opening Your Law Practice resource page at www.okbar.org/oylp.

CONCLUSION

The above steps necessary to properly maintain a trust account are detailed and can be time consuming depending on the number of transactions. There are software tools on the market that can make this task easier.

As someone who started her career as a bookkeeper, there is something Zen-like and satisfying when the numbers match in a perfect balance.

STARTING A LAW PRACTICE

Leveraging Technology

By Timothy Kent
STARTING A LAW PRACTICE IS A DAUNTING ENDEAVOR. Whether straight out of law school or savvy and seasoned, a lawyer’s decision to start his or her own law practice will undoubtedly lead to scores of sleepless nights and days without enough hours. Some of the immediate questions will likely include: What is the best entity to form for tax considerations? How much malpractice insurance do I need? Where will I office? Can I afford an office? How much staff support do I need? How much staff support can I afford? What will be my business model, revenue goal and marketing strategy? What in the hell am I doing? Included on the list of initial queries will hopefully be the question: Can I successfully leverage technology to help build, grow and sustain my law practice? For if this question is asked, diligently researched and appropriately applied, any aspiring entrepreneur will undoubtedly conclude the answer to be a resounding “Yes.”

The commitment to leverage technology can be one of the most valuable decisions an attorney makes when starting a new law practice. Utilizing technology correctly can help streamline workflows, increase productivity and provide effective solutions to practice issues ranging from overhead to client relations. So, what is the “right” technology?

PROCESS BEFORE TECHNOLOGY

Legendary basketball coach John Wooden once said, “Never mistake activity for achievement.” In any law practice a great amount of time is spent performing repetitive, administrative-type tasks, which do nothing to further the firm’s substantive work product. Routine tasks like billing, fielding client phone calls, calendaring events and filling out client intakes are mundane and time consuming in nature. Automating these tasks can free up valuable time which could be used to focus on more substantive work. Utilizing automation and productivity software to assist with these type of tasks can dramatically increase a firm’s efficiency and productivity, but what parts of your practice could or should be automated?

Taking time at the outset of your business venture to really consider the processes your firm goes through in order to provide services to your client base can go a long way to help answer this question. Carefully map each step of the process. Once you have mapped each step, ask yourself what parts of the process are substantive and what parts are administrative and repetitive. Next, consider how these administrative and repetitive parts could be automated. Automating the processes that you do not enjoy doing or that are repetitive and time consuming is a reasonable place to start.

This legal process mapping exercise will help to provide you with an idea of what areas of your practice could be automated and what areas demand your legal experience and full attention. Once you understand your firm’s processes, you can start implementing technology software to help streamline your workflows.

SOFTWARE ALTERNATIVES TO TRADITIONAL HARDWARE NEEDS

With the shift toward cloud-based storage and the rise of cloud-based software applications and application programming interface (API) technologies, office necessities that were traditionally only available in a hardware format (fax machines, landline telephone systems and in-house servers) are now accessible through online software purchase. These software versions are more cost effective and space efficient.
than their hardware counterparts, making them ideal solutions for budget conscious start-up firms.

Voice over IP (or VoIP) is a cost-effective way to emulate a centralized phone system for a law firm. VoIP phone services route telephone communications through internet connections rather than phone lines, allowing a firm to set up a main number that can be routed to a lawyer’s computer, smartphone, tablet or any other internet-enabled device.³

Internet fax services allow you to easily send and receive faxes. You have the ability to pull a document from the cloud and fax straight from your smartphone or tablet or fax files from your Dropbox, Google Drive or other cloud service.

Cloud-based storage plans offer the ability to place and retain data in an off-site storage system. You can lease cloud storage capacity per month or on demand. A cloud storage provider hosts a customer’s data in its own data center, providing fee-based computing, networking and storage infrastructure. Aside from the obvious upside of not having to shell out a large upfront capital investment and maintain onsite hardware, cloud technology is also arguably a more secure data storage option to traditional in-house servers, especially when considering disaster type situations.⁴

Although reliance on physical servers is much less necessary that it was 10 years ago, it is still necessary to obtain some form of hardware to interface with your firm’s software. A desktop or laptop computer is therefore an absolute must. With the trending acceptance of cloud-based storage and the downturn of in-house server reliance, both Macs and PCs are viable options for computing needs.

You will also need a scanner/printer. Fujitsu ScanSnap iX500 desktop scanner is considered by most experts to be the best option for firms looking to become more digital friendly and less paper-based.⁵ Throw in a smartphone or tablet and you have the baseline hardware needed to start operating a versatile, mobile law practice.

CLOUD-BASED SOFTWARE TECHNOLOGY – BASELINE AND BEYOND

Investing appropriately in cloud-based software can help new practices organize and manage information, automate tasks, reduce data entries and allow firms to effectively streamline workflows. With the overwhelming amount of technology on the market, determining what or how much technology your firm needs can be complicated. Focus on baseline technology needs first.⁶

Do you have a way to manage your cases and monitor your workflows? Cloud-based software practice management systems like MyCase, Practice Panther and Clio Practice Manager can help manage every aspect of your practice. Other software solutions to help your firm monitor workflows and track tasks include applications like Trello or Asana.

Do you have a way to securely communicate confidential information to clients, co-workers and opposing counsel? Secure web-based portals like Case Status and Clio Connect allow attorneys to share resources and collaborate with clients, contacts or co-counsels through encrypted web-based portals.⁷ These portals are much more secure than traditional email or text communications. Many practice management software systems, like those mentioned earlier, have built-in client portals that offer your clients 24/7 access to information like court schedules, deposition dates and more. This technology can automatically update clients, potentially reducing the amount of time spent fielding time-consuming client calls.

Do you have a way to conveniently execute documents? E-signature software like HelloSign and SignNow can help your budding practice expedite client retention agreements and settlement agreements by allowing your clients to execute documents on their mobile device or computer. E-signature software can also help alleviate concerns of signature tampering. Tamper-resistant document formats and sophisticated tracking mechanisms can readily identify when a document was viewed, who opened the document, when it was signed, what IP address it was signed by and more.8

When it comes to software solution possibilities, the sky appears to be the limit. Having a clear understanding of your firm’s processes can help you filter through the countless options to find solutions that best suit your new practices needs.

INTEGRATION
Finding the right cloud-based software applications to meet your firm’s baseline technology needs will go a long way in helping grow a new law practice. Likewise, finding a secure, reliable API integration solution to connect these applications and allow them to communicate seamlessly with one another, will help sustain a new practice even more. Integration software like Zapier can help your practice link all your cloud-based software services.9 Other integration solutions include options like Clio Practice Manager, a leading practice management system that has an open API which allows and encourages third-party developers to integrate with their platform. Finding these integration solutions can be a real game changer for any new practice.

Take the following hypothetical as an example: Joanne, a solo practitioner, is in a deposition and is unable to answer a call from a new prospective client. Instead of getting Joanne’s voicemail and hanging up to call another law firm, the potential client is routed to Joanne’s virtual receptionist service, where the client is able to provide some basic contact information and via Calendy, Joanne’s calendaring software, which allows the prospect to schedule a face-to-face consultation with Joanne for later that afternoon. Joanne’s Zapier software effortlessly syncs all of the scheduling information to Joanne’s Google Calendar, which automatically triggers an email to be sent out to the prospective client with a link to Joanne’s online client intake form. Upon clicking the link and completing the intake questionnaire, Zapier then syncs the collected data to Joanne’s practice management system. When Joanne returns to her office following the deposition, she is able to access the client’s information. With a few mouse clicks, Joanne is able to transfer the collected data to all the legal forms needed to file a claim on the prospective client’s behalf. Now when Joann meets with the prospect, she is prepared and confident and is able to secure the client’s trust. Instead of missing the call, this solo practitioner effectively leveraged technology to improve her practice.

CONCLUSION
Cloud-based software has been one of the most significant developments in the legal industry in the last several years. Correctly leveraging this technology can significantly bridge the competitive gap between “big firms” and solo/boutique practices. Cloud-based software allows firms both big and small to manage every aspect of their law practice, including document storage, document generation, calendaring, billing, accounting, time tracking, scheduling, task tracking, document sharing, client onboarding, client communications and more.

When adequate consideration is given to the legal process and automation and workflow software is selected and integrated appropriately, creating a sustainable and scalable practice is possible for any size firm. Successfully leveraging technology can lower overhead, increase productivity and allow many owners of startup firms the ability to be competitive in a market that they may not have had the ability to compete in otherwise.

ENDNOTES
MUCH HAS BEEN WRITTEN, much has been said regarding the future of the practice of law. My crystal ball is just not good enough to become “that guy” who will add to the prognostications. There are plenty of changes, which are now realities, that we are forced to deal with today.

There are many changes facing lawyers today. You can talk about demographic changes in a graying profession, whether the practice will be multijurisdictional or even multidisciplinary, competition from self-help or DIY tools, alternative legal service providers, LLLTs (limited license legal technicians) and last, but not least, technology. It is this last item that I would specifically like to address. Technology provides incredible tools, but it also creates additional exposures, which dovetail with professional liability.

Even in the past few years, technology has drastically changed, and that change has impacted the legal profession. There have been benefits such as aiding the administration of the firm, enhancing capabilities and providing value added information to the client. However, along with advancements have come increased overhead items, a demand to keep up with the latest and greatest options, new ethical conundrums and professional liability exposures that were never contemplated years ago. I don’t think anyone would argue that technology has meant that the business of law is more complicated. Yes, we still have insureds who are still pretty much paper only, but that number will continue to drop in the near future. Some states now have requirements to participate in CLE regarding technology.

The Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct require lawyers to be educated about the benefits and risks of relevant technology. Admittedly, that statement is so broad I am not sure how you know when you have arrived at an educational level to be competent in that regard, nor when you can attest to chiming the bar at the minimum required.

Today, most lawyers do the majority of their day-to-day endeavors on a cyber platform (e.g., electronic, digital, virtual and online). Because of that, cyber protection and cyber insurance is critical. The OAMIC LPL policy includes both first- and third-party cyber coverages. Practicing without it makes no sense.

Within your firm’s files, you possess personal identifiable information (PII). PII include names, drivers license numbers, social security numbers, financial records and account numbers, personal password information (hackers love this information) and maybe credit card numbers (hopefully not the latter). In addition, what you post and share can have implications of confidentiality violations and violations of privacy and data security laws.

Privacy laws at the state level include breach notification laws that establish requirements for notifying clients and mitigating damages in connection with breaches where PII and confidential information have been disclosed. The critical part of any breach is whether data has been exfiltrated. Even with no data exfiltration, a breach can be incredibly painful especially when malware has been left behind.
This all implies, and some states have explicitly stated, that a lawyer is required to use reasonable care to prevent third parties from gaining access to client funds in the trust account. Included within “reasonable care” is a need to establish reasonable security measures such as strong password policies and procedures, security software and even encryption. Firms should engage a technology consultant and large firms should have someone qualified on staff. Last, but certainly not least, everyone at the firm who in some fashion assists with the trust account should receive training on the security measures.

I mentioned earlier that along with the enhancements, technology also adds overhead factors. However, be careful not to scrimp on cybersecurity measures because the costs involved are much better than the costs of a data breach, the loss of client funds or even dealing with cyber extortion and malware. In 25 years, we have moved from a norm where not everyone had a desktop/laptop to a point where nobody can function without access to the proprietary “system.”

With respect to cost, even for the small law office, the amount expended per computer to install and maintain security software and firewall routers has decreased over time. This is at a time where not much else has decreased in cost.

A reality of exposure for all businesses, including law firms, is cybercrime, which is often referred to as social engineering. The most common example is the wire transfer/instruction fraud. Estimates are that hundreds of thousands of dollars are scammed from law firms due to false wire transfer instructions. We have seen a few examples involving Oklahoma law firms. To help understand how these matters of fraudulent wire instructions occur, consider the following scenario: A law firm representing a client in a real estate closing receives $250,000 proceeds from the sale. A paralegal at the firm receives a nearly perfect email impersonating the client which provides wiring instructions with routing number and account number. Money is wired as requested and by the time the real client called to inquire about timing of the receipt of funds and the fraud was detected, the monies had been removed from the overseas account. Unfortunately, crimes such as this are usually not automatically included in cyber insurance.

How do you spot fraudulent instruction? Here are some tips:

- Sender might claim to be traveling and available only by email;
- Sender claims urgency;
- Request might appear as coming from a mobile device; or
- Senders email and use of logo might be very similar to a CEO/CFO’s – often off by only a character. For example, CEO@company-xyz.com versus CEO@company-xyz.com.

How can you prevent this type of fraud?

- Always call the actual party to verify, and research the actual phone number to assure speaking to the real party. Common denominator in all these occurrences is failure to verify.
Use a secure domain. Services like AOL, Gmail and Yahoo are easier targets.

Do not accept wiring instructions or changes by email solely.

Always verify, in person or by phone, from a number in your contact information from the file, not from an email.

A large number of data breaches still occur from improper destruction of paper files or from lost/stolen laptops or mobile devices. Also, employee-owned mobile devices can add to risks. Make sure devices can be remotely wiped and install location-tracking apps on the devices.

You should make sure to vet your vendors since third-party vendors can be a vulnerable point of attack for hackers. It has been said that hackers don’t need to successfully hack Fortune 500 companies if they can hack law firms who represent them. In the same way, maybe it is easier for hackers to hack vendors than the law firms.

I remember a few years ago at the Solo & Small Firm Conference several new case management software companies presented their features and benefits. Knowing how normal it is to pressure software developers on speed of providing functionality, I could not help but wonder about their security. The security may be fantastic, but you must ask.

We advocate storing firm and client information in the cloud. However, confirm that a cloud provider provides reasonable assurance that the data is protected. Not all cloud providers are equal.

If you suspect your system has been breached, there are a few things you need to do:

- It is absolutely imperative to bring in forensic technology analysts to do a rapid assessment and mitigation of any damage and to determine if client data has been exfiltrated.
- Familiarize yourself with notification laws and requirements mandating notification and credit monitoring. Back up all data off-site.
- Engage legal counsel to advise and help manage, while also creating attorney/client privilege in the assessment and monitoring.

The largest number of cyber events we have seen with insured firms is cyber extortion (i.e., ransomware). According to the largest cyber claims handling group, ransomware incidents rocketed upward 105% from Q4 2018 to Q1 2019. Reportedly, target has shifted to larger organizations with higher ransom/extortion payments requested. These were between 89-93% higher than 2018. Ransomware, which locks firms out of their data/system is primarily accomplished by “phishing emails.” Help protect the firm by:

- Alerting employees to the flood of phishing emails;
- Train firm members not to open unsolicited attachments; and
- Train firm members to be leery of links requesting login or account information.

In today’s world, even the most highly protected, sophisticated operations experience cyber events. You could take the defeatist attitude of “what’s the use in trying.” Then again, why should we make it easy for extortionists and cyber criminals? Do everything possible to mitigate risks and exposures, which for most all of us includes the transfer of risk through insurance.

The 10 Do’s and Don’ts of Legal Marketing

By Marc Cerniglia and John Hinson

DO: BUILD A STRONG BRAND
In today’s world, “branding” is your reputation. Although you may not be able to explicitly call yourself an “expert,” a premium brand that positions you as the authority in your practice area screams your expertise without you ever actually saying, “I’m an expert.” To that point, it is recommended that attorneys niche down and focus on a single practice area or two. After all, you wouldn’t go to a general practitioner for brain surgery, would you? Why would someone go anywhere else other than the estate planning expert?

DO: LOVE YOUR WEBSITE
Your website is a reflection of your firm. (Think of it as a digital version of your office.) If your website is just “okay,” then it says to the world that your firm is just “okay.” Your website provides you with an opportunity to separate yourself from the competition. Creating a great user experience with a modern design, well-organized information, clearly defined messaging and a wealth of information and resources reinforces the brand you’re building as the go-to authority figure in your community.

DO: FOCUS ON YOUR PASSION
While niching down your practice areas makes you look like the expert to your audience, it will also make you a better lawyer. Rather than spreading yourself across a multitude of legal areas, focusing on the one (or two) areas that you’re especially passionate about allows you to really make a difference for the clients you work with. It makes your overall message more authentic because it allows that passion for what you do to really shine.

DO: SEND AN EMAIL NEWSLETTER
Email is a severely underutilized tool for law firms. There is a misconception floating around that people don’t want to receive your emails. It’s not true, and this thought is undermining one of the biggest ROI opportunities for law firms! For example, let’s say you have 1,000 contacts and only 100 open your email. Would you have really spent time in a given month individually reaching out to 100 people? Likely not (and that’s not even counting the other 900 who saw the email show up in your inbox and were reminded of you to begin with).

Additionally, email is an asset you can control. With SEO, social media, television or radio ads, you are relying on a third party to reach the right audience and do so effectively. With email, you already have the audience at your fingertips, and you are in control of what they receive from you. It’s the easiest way to get referrals and stay in touch ... with everyone!

DO: TRACK THE DATA THAT MATTERS
Marketing companies like to throw a ton of data points at you and bask in the glory of how they increase those numbers. Unfortunately, a lot of that data is pointless. Don’t get caught up in vanity data. It’s much easier for marketers (and you as their client) to focus on data that doesn’t help you make more money. Things like click rates, open rates, bounce rates and social media engagement are relatively useless data for law firms.

Instead, the metrics you should care about are simply the numbers that tell you whether or not a specific marketing campaign is working. So rather than focusing on how many comments and likes you got on social media or what your open rate is on your email newsletter, you should track referrals, case allocation and their average hourly fee and case value. In other words, track what marketers say they’re going to produce for you and nothing else.

DO: DIVERSIFY YOUR CONTENT

Not only should you diversify the actual content you produce, but diversify the channels you use to deliver it. Your content should be written (blog posts), visual (video) and more (like podcasts and webinars). We don’t all consume information the same way; some people prefer to read rather than watch (and vice versa).

Additionally, diversifying your content channels means posting your videos on YouTube, your website, social media and an email newsletter. Your blogs work the same way – put them on your website, social media, etc. Did you know you can even post videos and blogs to Avvo as publications and legal guides? The more places your content appears, the more credible you look.

DO: CREATE MARKETING LOOPS, NOT FUNNELS

Remember when you took that marketing class in law school? (You definitely learned about marketing in law school, right?!) Along the way, you may have heard the term “marketing funnel,” a concept in which the top of the funnel is where your prospective clients come from and the steps they take to ultimately reach the end (i.e., become your client). The funnel is designed to bring someone in and move them along the journey you want them to take to working with you.

The problem is that funnels end. Alternatively, a lot of prospects never reach the end. For example, you may run an ad and some people download a free resource and stop. Maybe some people call and ask about a consultation but don’t actually book one. Maybe someone comes in for a consultation but doesn’t become a client. What happens to all of those people? Hopefully you don’t forget about them!

That’s why it’s smart to create marketing loops – this way you continue staying in touch with people who haven’t made it to the end of your funnel on a consistent, recurring basis so you don’t miss out on the business you deserve.

DO: ELEVATE YOUR CREDIBILITY

People want to work with and refer others to the best. Unfortunately, we live in an age where simply saying you’re the best means very little. Today, the best cases go to the best marketers. According to a study by the ABA, people distrust lawyers more than banks, contractors and doctors. When you start any marketing campaign, you’re facing an uphill battle. However, you can earn your community’s trust by getting out there and speaking, putting on events and workshops at your office, starting a podcast, consistently putting out informative content and more.

DO: DO YOUR PART

If you’re just waiting around for your marketing company to make your phone ring off the hook, you’re setting yourself up for disaster. You can’t sit in your chair and just wait for the results to come in. You still need to network and grow your contact list. Look for ways to improve your conversion rate with the people who contact your office.
After all, no marketer can take responsibility for the results after someone walks through your door, and any marketing that requires little to nothing from you will never produce the results you really want.

DON’T: HAVE YOUR FRIEND DO YOUR WEBSITE

Often a friend or family member creates an attorney’s website. More often than not, it’s just “okay.” Think about this – would you advise your clients to let their friends or family handle their legal matters as a favor or at a discount? No! So, put your website in an expert’s hands.

DON’T: EXPECT SHORT-TERM RESULTS

Marketing takes time. Even more, the marketing that works the most effectively in the long run is often what works consistently. Solo and small law firms constantly deal with cash flow peaks and valleys. The key to combating that is to create a consistent flow of clients and referrals. Keep in mind that the type of marketing that accomplishes that goal doesn’t move at light speed. It takes time to build consistent communication, set expectations and establish a rapport with your audience, especially if you’re starting from scratch.

When people finally see you as an expert, they’ll send you more business, but no one becomes an expert overnight – it takes time. Whatever marketing initiative you undertake, make sure you know what to look for to make sure your marketing is working. (Track the data that matters!) Your job as a business owner shouldn’t be to find what works immediately, it should be the healthiest, smartest choice for your firm. Remember, people pay you up front for a future result. You should expect the same of your marketing.

DON’T: OVERLY FOCUS ON SEARCH ENGINES

Search engine optimization (SEO) is overrated. The best clients don’t come from Google. Instead, the clients that find you on Google are competing on price (more on that soon). Even more, you’re sinking a ton of money into the hope that you’ll be one of 10 spots on the first page (and half of those spots are directories like Avvo and Justia). Most marketing companies out there (falsely) emphasize SEO, which causes lawyers to neglect their other marketing because it forces their content to focus on Google’s bots, not the actual people they’re trying to attract.

DON’T: STRAY FROM WHAT HAS ALWAYS WORKED

Being good at what you do and staying in touch with the people you helped has always worked. It’s the oldest marketing principle in the book. However, the emergence of the internet has warped our minds into believing marketing has changed. Wrong. The psychology of marketing has not changed, the internet has just changed the medium in which we market. The key is to focus on what has always worked in marketing and to use the internet to make it more effective. Email newsletters, a consistent social media presence, informative content and a great website are the new tools you can use to build your reputation as an expert and stay in touch with people. The “how” and “what” have changed, but the “why” remains the same.

DON’T: WRITE IN LEGALESE

When it comes to writing content for your website, you’re not writing the next law school textbook. You’re writing for everyday people. So many attorneys get caught up in perfecting their content and worrying about what their attorney peers would think that they forget what their actual audience really wants. People don’t care about precedent or the latest case results. They want to know what to do when they’re facing a particular situation. Your content should focus on practical advice and answering the questions your audience has.

DON’T: FOCUS ON YOURSELF

This might be a little jarring for you to read, but you are not the hero of the story. Marketing that focuses on the client’s needs rather than the attorney is more powerful and tells a more engaging story. A website that has a big picture of you and your team in the header puts the focus on you and makes it all about you. It’s not about you. The best messaging is always “them” or “us,” not “I” or “me.”

Even more, the marketing that works the most effectively in the long run is often what works consistently.
DON’T: USE CLICHES

This is going to sting for some of you: If you have a gavel, the scales of justice or a picture of your local courthouse anywhere on your online presence, change it immediately. Don’t be like the majority of other attorneys and don’t play into the perceived stereotype people have of attorneys. Appeal to your audience’s emotions and their issues rather than a bland representation of the legal world.

DON’T: LOOK FOR A ONE-STOP SHOP

Don’t get all your marketing from one vendor. Remember our brain surgery analogy from earlier? The same applies to the vendors you work with. For example, business law is very different from family law. Marketing is the same way.

An all-in-one marketing company is the jack of all trades and master of none. You’re not getting an expert; instead, you’re limiting yourself to only one (nonexpert) voice in your marketing strategy. Look for experts in different areas of marketing. Work with vendors who take initiative to interact with your other marketing partners, so your campaigns work together in absolute harmony. While it may be more logistical work, the results will speak for themselves.

DON’T: GET CAUGHT UP IN THE WRONG DATA

Remember when we said “track the data that matters”? It’s simple: looking at the wrong data can undermine your marketing efforts. Take website traffic for example. If you want your website traffic to increase month after month, you may be failing to take into consideration what kind of traffic you’re actually getting. Having 10,000 website hits is great, but if 9,800 of those hits are crawler bots and manufactured foreign hits that are never going to need your services, what are you really accomplishing there?

DON’T: COMPETE ON PRICE

Obviously, you shouldn’t lower your rates just because you want to take business from the attorney across the street, but this final point goes far beyond that. This is a decision you need to make long before you tell anyone what your rate is. The decision to never waiver on your price comes when you start building your brand as the authoritative, credible expert in your field. You are not a commodity.

If you market yourself in such a way that positions you as the expert, price doesn’t even become part of the conversation. People will know they want to work with you and will do whatever it takes to pay you for your services. Whether you’re in a small town like Guymon or a big city like Tulsa, if you follow the tips outlined in this article, you’ll be well on your way to growing the firm you’ve always wanted.

Confessions of a Small-Town Attorney: A Day in the Life of a Ham and Egger

By Micah G. Ayache
EXPERIENCE

Law school may be the longest, most expensive initiation rite known to man. You pay a small fortune to leave your hallowed halls of learning armed with the ability to put “J.D.” behind your name. However, unless you worked in a clinic to gain experience in family court matters, law school doesn’t really teach one how to practically practice law. For example, after taking property law and learning the four elements for adverse possession, it all seems pretty simple ... until you are faced with your first quiet title by adverse possession lawsuit. More about that later.

One avenue for gaining experience is to work for a district attorney’s office as an intern and then hopefully as a “baby” assistant district attorney. If you are starting out fresh from law school, a stint in the office of the district attorney is invaluable. It is almost impossible to get a bar complaint, there are no overhead costs, you get state insurance, you have a staff of experienced attorneys and secretaries who know what you should be doing and how you should do it and you have an incredible amount of power. Another bonus includes a lot of court time. If the hearsay exceptions were a little vague during law school, you’ll learn them really fast as an assistant district attorney.

Since not every graduate returning to or settling in a small town can count on employment with the district attorney, you should track down the local attorney with the Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS) contract. This is much like working for the district attorney, but from the other end, as far as gaining invaluable courtroom experience. Working as an OIDS contractor you’ll get bar complaints, have no staff, still have overhead and have no power whatsoever, since all criminal defense attorneys are at the mercies of whatever assistant district attorney with whom you are dealing. However, you will build up a lot of repeat business from clients who may one day – when you divorce yourself from the OIDS roster – find themselves sufficiently imbued with funds to retain you. Added to this hope for future benefit, the relationships you build with the judges and courthouse staff will also serve you well in the future. Coupled with the necessary salary, the OIDS route is a good start for a new attorney in a small town.

While joining an established law firm is not out of the realm of possibility, most small towns appear populated with what John Grisham calls “Ham and Egg Lawyers”: single-lawyer firms with one secretary. In the event that two or more lawyers have teamed up and formed a firm, the odds of them hiring are somewhat slim, and if such a conglomerate is hiring, they’ve already taken on the newly graduated son or daughter of a law school buddy, which means you can’t count on joining an established small-town firm.

HANGING THE SHINGLE

At some point, feeling now comfortable in your small town, you may decide to spread your wings and open your own practice.
This is not the same as hanging a shingle in a city. In a small town everybody knows you. You may look about as far away from being a lawyer as it is possible to get and still be asked if you like being a lawyer. What this means is reputation is everything. In a small town, news travels fast and everyone talks. Small towns have, it seems, a whole class of citizens who collect legal troubles but have either no way of paying an attorney to resolve those legal problems or have no desire to pay an attorney to resolve those legal problems. If you hang your shingle, you will meet all of these people in the first six months of opening up. If they’ve had some legal issue unresolved for years, just know there is a reason why it has gone unresolved and it is probably financial.

In spite of what you tell yourself, none of us endured the misery of law school to “help our fellow citizens” as our only goal. Without the promise of payment we usually have no incentive to raise to our hind legs in court and do verbal battle with opponents and judges. Rather, we remain silent as the tomb until the currency of the realm works to loosen our tongues. Basically, while we may desire to help our fellow man, we would like to be paid to do it. That overhead you did not have with the district attorney is constant and always looming in private practice.

In a small town you’ll do a lot of criminal work and family (divorce/paternity) work. When these clients come flooding in you will need to have an effective billing program to keep track of who has paid what, and more importantly, a secretary who can chase money. If you can get half a fee, you will consider yourself paid. Often times what you take up front is all you ever get, particularly with criminal cases. This poses a problem when it is midway through the month and you have yet to cover your monthly bills. It may be the day before “Be Back” day, then someone comes in needing a lawyer for a three-felony-count case and a couple of trailing misdemeanors.

Small town practice is a lot of billing work. Make sure you know your judges’ thoughts on withdrawal for nonpayment of fees. Ascertain if in a certain jurisdiction you must get all your fee up front because that county will not let you withdraw even if you have a contract that shows you are entitled to withdraw for nonpayment of fees.

DAILY PRACTICE

The experience of practicing law in a small town is not confined to office hours or office environments. As noted above, the entire town will know you are a lawyer. Always take business cards when you go to Wal-Mart or the high school football game or the FFA fundraising lunch, because many times someone will need to come see you on Monday and hopefully bring some money.

Contracts for representation are a good idea, as in these you can clearly show what the limits of your representation may be and how much you will be paid for doing this representation. However, understand that the payment portion often means nothing. If you sue a client on the payment issue based on the contract, you will have your judgment, that with a dollar will buy you a cup of coffee.

Starting off in a small town, you may not have much to worry about regarding conflicts of representation. An exception would be if you were first employed by the district attorney’s office. Believe it or not, many criminal clients will have been clients of some other lawyer for some time prior to your striking out on your own, and it is actually a misdemeanor criminal offense that mandates loss of license to offer advice to a person you have previously prosecuted, as well as being a breach of the Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.9.²

Therefore, in a small town, a “conflict” database is a must. However, even with a conflict database conflicts will slip through the cracks. If you only put a principal litigant (of three persons) in a conflicts database, you may end up suing a current client several years later if the initial matter was never resolved. The only answer would be to immediately withdraw from both cases.

In a small town, many people work out of town which means you may make appointments.
outside “city” hours. A divorce consultation may happen when the potential client gets back in town, and this may be after 6 p.m. It may be on a Saturday or even a Sunday. Fortunately, there is always plenty to do and it is nice to get something done without having to take phone calls every few minutes.

Small town practice means you are on your own. If some tricky point of law comes up, or some elusive statute needs to be tracked down, you don’t get to walk next door and ask another firm lawyer. It also means when scheduling conflicts arise – and they will – you don’t get to ask another lawyer in your building to cover for you. Some judges and lawyers will just set stuff. Some opponent files a motion to compel or some equally annoying document, and the first time you know about it is when you get a schedule from the judge’s office showing you are on the next motion docket. The problem may be that you have had a hearing on the merits or a preliminary hearing scheduled for the past six weeks on that exact same day!

When this happens, it is always an out-of-town matter, so that means a lengthy session resolving the conflict. Experiences in this vary; some courts will just move it to the next docket, some will require a motion and proposed order. Consultation with the moving party (who invariably practices in that jurisdiction and so is always at the motion docket anyway) is a must, so before you know it there goes 30 minutes to an hour of your day. On occasion you will have to trot out “The Oklahoma Guidelines for Resolving Scheduling Conflicts” to resolve the problem of needing to be in two different places at the same time.

However, good working relationships with your fellows will help relieve anxiety when such conflicts or gaps in knowledge occur. You will have local lawyers call you on Sunday to ask your opinion about some issue, and you will cover matters and have matters covered when scheduling conflicts come up. Such is life in the practice of small-town law.

When newly striking out on your own, you will find that knowing the law and accurately conveying that knowledge in the form of pleadings and journal entries are two quite different animals. Remember the first quiet title suit mentioned earlier? It seemed simple and in retrospect, it was a simple quiet title suit. Now you can draft a petition, get everything published and obtain approval and recording of a journal entry without breaking a sweat. Back then, your adopted mentor may call you an idiot and do the petition for you if he does not want his alma mater embarrassed by your work. Turns out just saying those four elements of adverse possession and asking for the property, please, does not make a very effective journal entry from a title examiner’s point of view. For the first two to three years it will take you about six times longer to do anything than it should have taken because you have no idea how to actually practice law. You cannot charge clients for the actual time you spend on their issues until you get a series of petitions and motions which can be used and reused. Anyone who is starting out in a small town should get an established lawyer to review pleadings and be your mentor. If you can share an office as you establish your own practice, do it!

END RESULT

When all is said and done, you will find the practice of small-town law quite demanding. Everybody who comes into your office has problems, and sometimes these problems have been years in the making. You tell your clients that if you were doing this on your own you would guarantee them what they want. However, since you have the district attorney or other opposing counsel and the judge to convince, what they want may not happen. All you can promise is that you will work as hard as you can to get them what they want. Small-town law practice means you will see these people again, perhaps in Wal-Mart, at the Relay for Life or maybe football or basketball games, all the usual events that happen in a small town. If you have won your case, these meetings are sometimes quite nice. If you did not prevail, you will always feel as if you let them down, even if they seem pleased with how the case was conducted. The practice of law in a small town is definitely more personal than in a large city in that you are never really away from it. If you are out in public, so are your clients or opposing parties. Shaking hands with the other side of a pending divorce case at the FFA auction can be awkward but happens frequently. The plus side of a small-town practice is the general collegiate atmosphere most lawyers have with one another, and you wouldn’t have it any other way.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Micah G. Ayache is an attorney based in Pauls Valley. Originally from New Zealand, where he was a sworn officer with the New Zealand Police Service, Mr. Ayache settled in Oklahoma in 2002. Upon graduating from the OU College of Law, he worked as assistant district attorney for Cleveland, McClain and Garvin counties. In 2010, Mr. Ayache opened his solo practice.

Oklahoma Lawyers Selected for Leadership Academy

Eighteen future leaders of Oklahoma’s legal community have been selected to receive training in leadership, motivation and communication as members of the Oklahoma Bar Association Leadership Academy class of 2019-2020. The academy participants were chosen from a pool of applicants spanning the state.

“Building quality leaders is important,” OBA President Chuck Chesnut of Miami said. “Participation in this academy helps individuals enhance their knowledge and skills, giving them tools to be better lawyers and leaders, which benefits their communities and the legal profession.”

Originating from the OBA’s Leadership Conference in 2007, the academy is aimed at developing the future leaders of the OBA by giving Oklahoma attorneys training in the core principles of effective leadership and how to communicate, motivate and succeed in their legal careers and also as community leaders.

The OBA Leadership Academy includes four sessions, the first of which took place Sept. 13. The academy will conclude in April 2020. Sessions will be led by experienced leaders from various backgrounds including military officers, former OBA presidents, leadership experts and high-profile public officials.

More information about the Leadership Academy is available on the OBA website at www.okbar.org/members/leadership.

OBA Committee Membership – Please Join Us!

Now is the time to join one or more of the OBA standing committees as a part of your membership in the OBA. Committees cover a wide range of subject matter and topics.

Why join a committee? Being a committee member, along with section membership, is one of the best ways to get more involved with the OBA. Committee membership provides ways to get to know lawyers and judges who may have very different backgrounds, interests and experiences from you and offers an opportunity to make friends, get known in the legal community and develop referral and mentoring relationships with lawyers from all across the state.

Most committees allow meeting attendance by conference call, so your geographical location does not matter in terms of participation if you are not able to make each meeting in person. In addition, some OBA committees are devoted to service to the community in which we live and practice, which in turn helps enhance the image of our profession within the community.

I have served on many OBA committees over the years and it has provided me with many benefits to my law practice, for which I am grateful. It is also a wonderful way to give back to our legal profession. Even if you have only a little time to spare, we can use your help. Please join us.

Joining a committee is easy. Go to www.okbar.org/committees and click “Committee Sign Up.” I will be making appointments soon.

Susan B. Shields, President-Elect

MOST OF WHAT I WRITE is random. It does not require much preparation to be random. You just need to live long enough to have accumulated enough random thoughts to fill a page every once in a while.

First, I would like to know why every morning my computer starts off with pictures somewhere far away. It’s not just far away places, but places that look exotic. The screen offers a teaser of something to the effect of can you guess where this is. On occasion, it is familiar or somewhere I have been. Mostly, they are just sun-filled beaches and villas and turquoise water. Great, just what I need to see on a cold and bleak day. NOT. I don’t need to be reminded that I need to be at the beach. It is mostly just cruel to show me this. PLUS, I can’t ever figure how to find out the location. My computer screen next goes to email and the day’s calendar. I used to have a thing that showed me topical fish, and I was happy with that. I may have to write to Microsoft and request that either this teasing stop or at least I get entered in a drawing to have a chance of going to one of these places. I like to begin everyday with the idea that something great is going to happen. Having a chance to win a trip to clear blue water and sugary beaches surely would increase my expectations.

Second, one of my favorite people to be random with is Chuck Chesnut. He tolerates me pretty well and on occasion he can go down the randomness road himself. He often will lead with an open-ended question like, “John, do you ever think that some people just aren’t aware of X.” I’ll fill in the X this time. “Yes, Chuck I do not think some people are aware that you drove way over 10,000 miles as OBA president. When you consider Board of Governors time, president-elect and past president, there’s no telling what that number is. It is a far piece to Miami and back. This in addition to the meetings, conferences and events you attended.”

Third, besides President Chesnut, without all the OBA officers and governors, committee chairs, section chairs and countless other members who volunteer their time the OBA would not function or exist. I have repeatedly heard and believe that our best lives are lived in service to others. This is especially true when our service to others is tightly connected to our vocational passions. It kind of makes that work and pleasure thing unite into some pretty fulfilling and valuable activities and products. I know almost everyone who serves the OBA in one way or the other sells time for a living. If there is one thing that is part of my randomness, it is gratitude. Sometimes, I see people and the incredible and selfless things they do and I have to just reach out into the universe to my version of the creator and say, “thank you.” Here, I decided to put it in writing so that perhaps one or two of those personal heroes of mine may be reading this.

Fourth, so here we are last article of the year. I’m not going to look back. Every time I do that, I tend to run into something. Looking back would cause some tears at losses, pride in things accomplished, joy of still being alive and working for such a wonderful organization. Looking back would remind me that all that I am and all that I have owe to other people. It would remind me that I love the people I work with and for. Looking back would remind me that I need to get the back window washed where the dogs put their noses on it. So, I will not look back.

I will not look back. I will be proactive. I will figure out where one of those exotic beaches on the computer is and start planning to go there. I will say thank you more often. I will get the car washed. I will try to be less random. But, I will purposely conclude with my gratitude to President Chuck Chesnut and all the OBA leadership and staff for a fulfilling and productive year.

To contact Executive Director Williams, email him at johnw@okbar.org.
timetable, and the event came off without a hitch.

We are so fortunate to have the bar staff that we have. This bar association has 15,794 active members being served by a bar staff of 42 people. They do an amazing job of trying to make our lives as practicing attorneys easier and more productive. My hat is off to them for their efforts on our behalf.

I think it’s interesting how certain words and phrases come into vogue. These days when we want to study something as an organization, we appoint “task forces.”

This year, I appointed a task force to study continuing legal education. Chaired by Jack Brown of Tulsa and co-chaired by our President-Elect Susan Shields, it was comprised of a blue-ribbon group of Oklahoma lawyers. In addition, many OBA staff members also served on the task force. It met monthly from January to June and studied all aspects of CLE. The real issue was whether the OBA needs to be in the CLE business, and if so, how should it best be structured to produce maximum value to our members.

The committee ultimately recommended that we target CLE programs for new lawyers, promote greater coordination with sections and committees on CLE programs and increase the number of mandatory legal ethics credits.

There was lengthy discussion on increasing the overall number of required CLE credits that continued over several meetings. The task force ultimately decided to leave the total number of required credits at 12 per year. However, it did decide to recommend the adoption of a new definition of legal ethics and professionalism, which includes legal malpractice prevention. Of the two required hours of continuing education on legal ethics and professionalism, they may be for programming on either legal ethics and professionalism, legal malpractice prevention and/or mental health and substance use disorders.

Our financial situation as a bar association is strong. Although projected to have a deficit budget, our method of underestimating income and over estimating expenses has kept us on a solid financial footing. We have ample money in reserve to deal with emergencies. Craig Combs, our director of administration, and John Morris Williams, our executive director, do a great job in managing our financial resources.

As an association, we have not had a dues increase since 2005. Dues are $275 per year for members who have been practicing more than three years. The cost of living has increased 35% since that time. I’m forewarning you that it’s hard to maintain dues at the current level when expenses increase on a continuing basis. We will need to have a dues increase in the near future just to keep step.

Looking forward, I think the outlook for the Oklahoma Bar Association is bright. We are blessed with strong leadership by solid people with vision who make good common-sense decisions on our behalf on a day-to-day basis. That’s what we want and that’s what we need.

I am thrilled at the prospect of Susan Shields and Mike Mordy leading us for the next two years. We have a great group serving as our Board of Governors, and I am grateful to them for their support and advice this year.

Finally, I just want to say thank you for the opportunity to be president of this association in 2019. It has been exciting and challenging but a richly rewarding time in my life.
EVERYONE’S A CRITIC.
I must confess to frequent aggravation as I read some pieces of criticism directed at lawyers in private practice, especially ones written by those who have never spent any time working in a law firm. So, let me open with my response to all of them. If you have never worked in a law firm, it is challenging to appreciate the pressure, the stress and the responsibility of handling very important matters for many clients. Often, lawyers are dealing with the most important and stressful situation in their client’s lives.

It is also hard to appreciate the workflow of law firms and how one thing, like a judge requesting additional briefing on an issue, can impact a week’s workload. Some time ago, I read a tweet from a lawyer that said, “Being a lawyer is easy. It’s like riding a bike except the bike is on fire, and the ground is on fire. Everything is on fire.” (An internet search reveals that that statement is used for almost every profession and now adorns everything from blank notebooks to cards.) Hopefully your law practice is not like that every day, but most lawyers do have days (or weeks) that feel that way.

As I read social media and blog posts criticizing lawyers for failing to adopt the latest technology tool or other shortcomings, I sometimes think the author might approach the subject differently if they had ridden that bicycle for a while.

SOME SHOCKING STATISTICS
Having said that, two recent items revealed by surveys and studies about lawyer marketing “fails” actually shocked me.

The first “shocker” was from the 2019 Legal Technology Survey Report from American Bar Association’s Legal Technology Resource Center. The survey reported that 43% of solo lawyers do not have websites. That is hard to believe. For law firms of two to nine lawyers, 92% reported having a website. I would note that some firms of that size are likely “single client firms,” for which a website is arguably a low priority.

If you are interested in more of this survey’s data on marketing, read legal journalist Bob Ambrogi’s article on LawSitesBlog.com “Nearly Half of Solos Have No Website; Two-Thirds of Firms Not on Twitter; 30% Have Blogs.”

However, that wasn’t my biggest shock. The biggest shock was contained in the 2019 Legal Trends Report released by practice management software solution Clio. This is the fourth such annual report, and it contains a lot of interesting data.

The shock was data indicating how poorly law firms today respond when contacted by potential clients. Marketing is about generating leads. If you are dropping most of the leads you generate, your marketing efforts are largely futile.

Clio asked clients what reasons they had for not hiring the lawyers they contacted, and 64% indicated they contacted a law firm that never responded either through phone or email. Contrast that with the 89% of legal professionals who say they respond to email or phone inquiries within 24 hours.

I found that data very hard to reconcile. Apparently, Clio did too. Given the gap between the responses of lawyers and potential clients, Clio commissioned a study. One thousand law firms were emailed and 500 phoned about a possible engagement. The methodology of selecting the law firms sampled is detailed in the report.

Are you ready? 60% of law firms didn’t respond to the emails at all.

The good news is that those who did respond mostly responded within 24 hours. The bad news, at least from the consumer point of view, was the majority of responses indicated that the potential client should call the office instead of communicating through email.

Phone calls were somewhat better, likely because law firms have someone whose job is answering the phone, but the data in the study was still surprising.
56% of law firms answered the calls
39% of the calls went to voicemail – of which 57% didn’t return the call within 72 hours
5% of the calls were unanswered

So approximately 27% of law firms were not reachable by phone.

It is possible to rationalize some of this data. There are many email spammers and scammers. Emails attempting to set the law firm up for a scam may have conditioned some lawyers to only talk to new clients on the phone. Maybe lawyers have been listening when we talk about the inherent insecurity of email. Maybe lawyers have decided that responding to these emails rarely results in clients retaining them, but dropping so many potential leads, whether from email or phone, is not a good business practice.

NEW CLIENT INTAKE

As we prepare to begin another calendar year, it is a good idea for all law firms to examine how they handle contacts from potential clients. The smaller the law firm is, the more likely it is that someone may not be available every time the phone rings. The firm that handles only a few types of matters may decide to empower staff to tell callers the law firm doesn’t handle that type of matter.
However, the lawyers may want a different rule for a client the firm has represented previously.

It’s not good for a lawyer’s reputation to fail to return phone calls. When it is client phone calls that are not being returned, this may set the stage for a grievance against the lawyer. When it is potential client phone calls that are not being returned, these lost opportunities may impact the firm’s revenue.

Larger law firms should have a formalized written intake process. This plan should deal with responding to potential new client inquiries when the lawyers are unavailable to respond promptly.

A solo or small firm lawyer, particularly those without full-time staff, should strongly consider hiring a virtual receptionist service and providing them every week with some open hours that they can schedule appointments and the criteria as to whether they should schedule an appointment or just take a message. The lawyer should also keep track of those new client engagements that the firm might have missed without the virtual receptionist service.

Hiring and working positively with a virtual receptionist service can provide better client service and keep the lawyer from dropning the ball when a potential client contacts them wishing to hire the law firm. Some lawyers may find that service pays for itself.

WEBSITES FOR SOLOS

I think many solo practitioners do not have websites because they have been conditioned to the idea that they have to do everything themselves and they do not know how to do this project.

Today, a website is just as necessary as a listed telephone number and law firm address for a lawyer in private practice. Your website is your address for those who are looking to hire a lawyer and almost every potential client today will check out your website before contacting you directly. Many times, missing to find a website for a lawyer means the potential client will move on to the next potential lawyer.

What makes a website valuable for marketing has changed over the last several years. Today the first rule, particularly for those firms that cater to individual consumer clients, is that the website needs to look good on the phone and other mobile devices.
Hopefully the website will look good on a computer as well.

For many years it was a smart and thrifty decision to hire someone with a little bit of HTML coding experience to build your website for you. Today, we must consider whether an amateur or hobbyist will include the proper tags for search engines to index your website and whether the result will be mobile friendly.

There are three aspects to hanging a website. It is important to understand all three aspects because many companies attempt to bundle all of these services together. That just makes sense as most customers prefer a “turn key” all-in-one service, but it’s not good to understand the basics as a consumer. You must 1) select and register a domain name, 2) have your website design created and
3) the site must be hosted online where it will be accessible 24/7.

While these are all separate functions, they are often bundled together by providers.

First, the Domain Name

For the law firms that do not yet have a website, one of the most challenging parts is to come up with a unique and relatively short domain name. This is particularly true if your name happens to be a very common one such as Jim Smith. Law firm domain names (domain names in general) are very significant. Picking a good domain name is very important as you may well live with it for the rest of your legal career. If possible, it should be short and easy to type. Likely at some point, your law firm business email addresses should use this domain name.

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) is a nongovernmental organization that oversees “top level domains.” They have approved many registrars. You can find that service pays for itself.

Next: The Host and Design

There are many companies that do website hosting.

There are also many people who have the skills to design websites, but finding someone is often a challenge today. You can ask fellow solo or small firm lawyers with websites you like for refer-rels for who they used. There are designers who can build and even help you maintain your website for a reasonable cost.

WordPress now dominates as the platform of choice for many basic websites. It is easier than ever to build your own website with the tools available. Some lawyers with an interest can build a site using WordPress, but beware that “easier” does not mean “easy.” That is why WordPress classes are widely available.

The nice thing about the WordPress platform is because of its history as a blogging platform, a well-designed site will allow someone to update and add posts without requiring much technical skill, but be cautious about the numerous WordPress plug-ins that are available. Most are, no doubt, useful, but everything you add is something else that needs to be maintained and regularly updated. A plug-in that is not updated can become a significant security risk.

A do-it-yourselfer without much experience is probably safer to use services like Wix, Weebly or Squarespace as opposed to WordPress. These are better geared to help the inexperienced create simple websites in a relatively short amount of time.

Note that it is important that the lawyer ultimately be the one listed as the official owner of the domain and in possession of the username and password for their website. You do not want to be the lawyer whose domain name is expiring and the person who registered and created the site cannot be located.

The goal of website design is to have a simple and attractive website design that looks good on the smartphone and provides the information potential clients are seeking.

Content
Here are a few things I think a law firm should have on its website.

- The names, photos and contact information for all the attorneys. Have an appealing picture. Posing in front of a wall of law books is just too cliché, in the opinion of many experts.
- A map to the office. Unless your office is on the main street of a very small town, you should have directions to your office. Often this can be done through Google Maps.
- Your practice areas. Whether you handle many different types of cases or a few, potential clients are looking for someone who handles their kind of matter. Don’t be embarrassed to use more than one term that means essentially the same thing. Potential clients may not know what certain legal terms mean.
- Flawlessly written content with no misspellings or poor grammar.
- Simple, clear and serious content.
- Appropriate disclaimers. A website is informational, not legal advice. You are only licensed in certain jurisdictions. No attorney-client relationship is created merely by visiting the website. The usual stuff.
- Compliance with the ethics rules. As you are preparing the content of your website, be sure and review rules 7.1 through 7.5 of the Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct.
- Attractive pictures and graphic elements. You don’t have to go overboard here, but the internet is a graphic media and you need some graphics. Take some pictures with your smartphone to produce graphics you can use that you don’t have to purchase or license.

Don’t spend months perfecting the most ambitious website. Start simple and do it right. Make notes of what additional things you would like to do for the next version. Then add your site’s web address to your stationery, your email signature block and your business cards.

Website Goals
Remember that your goal is to attract clients, not to impress other lawyers.

Clients rarely care about most items that are typically contained in lawyer biographies. They have a problem and they want to know if you can help them with their problem. Use language that describes the problem and your services. This is not to say you should omit important biographical information. After all, lawyers from other regions seeking to refer a case may be interested in that, but your website shouldn’t focus on the fact you were named to the law review 15 years ago in law school.

If you want valuable feedback on your website, ask friends and relatives who have nothing to do with the legal profession to give you their feedback. They better reflect your intended audience than you do. Of course, they may not understand the ethical limits on what a lawyer should publish online.

CONCLUSION
We have covered two main points this month, both of which are critical for the success of your law practice.

All law firms, regardless of size, need a formal procedure for dealing with inquiries from potential new clients. This varies significantly depending on the particulars of the law firm, but the bottom line should be that everyone who reaches out to your law firm deserves a response even if the response is to refer them to a different lawyer or to tell them you cannot help them. Solo practitioners may need to consider virtual assistant services to respond to new client inquiries and schedule appointments.

Solo practitioners need an online presence so that potential new clients can locate them. The foundation of this online presence is a website. If you’re a solo practitioner who doesn’t have a website, it’s time to prioritize setting one up.

As I write this sentence, I have been the OBA ethics counsel for approximately one month. So far, the job has been rewarding and interesting but quite busy. The volume of calls and emails I receive point to the fact that Oklahoma lawyers want to do the right thing and fulfill their obligation under the Rules of Professional Conduct.

The position of ethics counsel was created in 2002 as a service to Oklahoma bar members. Ethics counsel serves as a resource to seek advice and counsel for ethical issues. Consultations are available only to OBA members. Communications with the ethics counsel are confidential and privileged. Records of all calls are kept by name and OBA member number, including summaries of the inquiry and advice given. While the opinions and advice given are not binding on any court or tribunal, evidence of a consultation with ethics counsel may be a mitigating factor if a grievance is filed.

I recently attended a swearing-in ceremony for new attorneys in another state. The process there included an optional introduction (special motion) by a member of that state’s bar. It occurred to me while I was there that a great number of the introductions mentioned the ethics of the soon-to-be-admitted lawyer. Ethics, ethical conduct and even work ethic were mentioned over and over. In a ceremony that lasted almost 3 hours, I found time to consult a dictionary about ethics. That was something that I do not remember doing before, even when I was hired as ethics counsel, because I thought that I knew what “ethics” meant.

This is how “ethics” is defined by Merriam-Webster: “The discipline dealing with what is good and bad and with moral duty and obligation.”

Once we take the oath as attorneys we are bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct, but most of us do not regularly consult those rules. We only look to them when a specific issue arises. I think it is good to review those things that we know from time to time. Sometimes, I have boldly told colleagues what the law says. I have done this because I had looked up this point in the past and I remembered it well. Often, I looked up that point again and was reminded of something Mark Twain once said: “When I was younger I could remember anything, whether it happened or not; but I am getting old, and soon I shall remember only the latter.”

Finally, lawyers are members of a profession which often produces stress and issues which flow therefrom. A significant number of ethical violations stem from mental health and substance abuse issues. Lawyers are trained to be self-sufficient and not show weakness. It can be difficult to ask for help for yourself or for someone you know, but I think we must take care of ourselves and strive to help our colleagues.

The OBA offers all bar members up to 6 hours of free short-term, problem-focused or crisis counseling. The service is strictly confidential. For help with stress, depression or addiction, call the Lawyers Helping Lawyers hotline, 800-364-7886, to be referred to a counselor in your area. The hotline is available 24 hours a day 7 days a week. Identifying participant information is not made available to the OBA and services are provided through a separate, contracted organization.

Mr. Stevens is OBA ethics counsel. Have an ethics question? It’s a member benefit, and all inquiries are confidential. Contact him at richards@okbar.org or 405-416-7055. Ethics information is also online at www.okbar.org/ec.

REPORT OF THE YOUNG LAWYERS DIVISION

Governor Nowakowski reported she participated in the inaugural teleconference for ABA state membership chairs, and she is the new membership chair for the region. She, with other YLD Executive Committee members, attended the YLD Fall Conference in New Orleans. YLD Secretary Caroline Shaffer-Siex has been appointed to a two-year position as ABA YLD district representative. Ms. Nowakowski shared details about the upcoming Midtown Pub Crawl event, co-hosted by the YLD, at Annual Meeting. The division is sponsoring the costume contest for the Thursday Out of This World Party. President Chesnut reported the early bird discount registration deadline has been extended three days to Oct. 18 at midnight.

BOARD LIAISON REPORTS

Governor Williams said the Diversity Committee held its annual awards dinner at the Oklahoma Judicial Center, which was well attended. Vice President Neal said the Law Schools Committee did not meet but is working on revising its charter that will be presented to the board at the December meeting. Governor Hermanson said the Law Day Committee is concerned about its budget cut. Executive Director Williams said the contract has been signed with the new provider for Lawyers Helping Lawyers Assistance Program Committee services, which will switch over Dec. 1 creating an overlap of one month with the current provider. Scripts for those answering the phone have been written. Governor DeClerck said committee Chair Jeannie Snider and member Ben Rogers did an excellent job in their presentation to the Garfield County Bar Association. It was noted that lawyer wellness will be an emphasis next year. President-Elect Shields asked governors to make room for LHL speakers to come to county bar meetings to speak. Past President Hays said the Women in Law Committee banquet in Oklahoma City will take place Oct. 25. Executive Director Williams reported the Access to Justice Committee is involved in the creation of a new website for the public. He described the idea for the collection of materials called Law for People that will be offered. The Family Law Section is updating guardianship information and self-help guardian forms will be made available. The Communications Committee has been asked to help with marketing.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL

General Counsel Hendryx briefed board members on the pending lawsuit in New Jersey. A written report of PRC actions and OBA disciplinary matters from Aug. 16 to Oct. 9, was submitted to the board for its review.

PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY COMMISSION APPOINTMENT

The board approved President Chesnut’s recommendation to appoint Karen A. Henson, Shawnee, to complete an unexpired term on the PRC ending 12/31/2021.

It was noted that lawyer wellness will be an emphasis next year. President-Elect Shields asked governors to make room for LHL speakers to come to county bar meetings to speak.
PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY TRIBUNAL APPOINTMENT

The board approved President Chesnut’s recommendation to appoint Lane R. Neal, Oklahoma City, to complete an unexpired term on the PRT ending 6/30/2021.

CHILD DEATH REVIEW BOARD APPOINTMENT

The board voted to nominate Susan Damron, Oklahoma City, as a candidate for appointment to the Child Death Review Board for a two-year term.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The board voted to go into executive session to discuss the executive director’s evaluation. The board met and voted to come out of executive session.

DESTRUCTION OF JNC BALLOTS

The board authorized Executive Director Williams to destroy ballots from the recent Judicial Nominating Commission election.

2020 PROPOSED BUDGET

President-Elect Shields called attention to the budget materials in the board packet. She said the committee met, and the meeting was well attended. A hearing was set, members notified, but no one attended. The proposed budget projects a deficit, but funds from the technology reserve fund will be utilized to balance the budget. Administration Director Combs reviewed the budget summary with a comparison to 2019. He said the estimated deficit is less than last year. Changes include pay increases for staff members and the doubling of funding for the Lawyers Helping Lawyers Assistance Program. The board approved the proposed budget.

RATIFICATION OF EMAIL VOTE

The board voted to appoint Glen Huff, Oklahoma City, as a special member to the Council on Judicial Complaints due to the recusal of another council member.

OKLAHOMA BAR EXAMINATION ADVISORY COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS

President Chesnut appointed President-Elect Shields, Oklahoma City; Stephen Stephens, Stillwater; and Ryan Haynie, Oklahoma City, to the Oklahoma Bar Examination Advisory Committee created Sept. 16, 2019. Their terms will expire December 2020. President-Elect Shields shared information about the first meeting. She said 38 states have adopted the universal exam, and Oklahoma is not one of them. She explained that utilizing the universal exam affects reciprocity with other states and provides portability.

COPYRIGHT ISSUE

Executive Director Williams briefed the board on a Mock Trial High School Program presentation that was posted to the OBA website for a workshop. Copyrighted material was included in the presentation, and a fee for the violation is being requested. He described the fee negotiations that have taken place. The board authorized Executive Director Williams to resolve the issue at the lowest cost possible.

NEXT MEETING

The Board of Governors met in November, and a summary of those actions will be published in the Oklahoma Bar Journal once the minutes are approved. The next board meeting will be at 10 a.m. Friday, Dec. 13, in Oklahoma City.
AT THE 2019 ANNUAL MEETING, the Oklahoma Bar Foundation recognized several outstanding Oklahoma attorneys and OBF board members who have contributed to the success of the organization’s programs and events.

THE ROGER R. SCOTT MEMORIAL AWARD
This year’s award recipient is the Family Law Section for their continuing commitment and support of the OBF and its Fellows Program. Each year, the Family Law Section donates $5,000 as a Community Fellow and takes an active role in educating members on the work of the OBF. The section also sponsored the first ever “Rock the Foundation – Lip Sync for Justice” fundraiser in 2019 and has also raised funds for the OBF through their own section fundraisers in past years. Thank you to the members of the Family Law Section for your continued support to ensure justice is possible for all Oklahomans!

THE GERALD B. KLEIN - JACK L. BROWN AWARD
Doug Burns, Terry Stowers, Allen DeVore and James Kee were all recipients of this year’s award for their role in originating the OBF Court Grant Fund designed to improve the administration of justice in Oklahoma by modernizing courtroom technology in district and appellate courts. This program has awarded over $980,000 to 66 different county district courts across the state since 2008.

SERVICE AS PRESIDENT
Jennifer Castillo was recognized for her outstanding service and leadership as 2019 Board of Trustees president. President Castillo traveled with the OBF to several conferences held by the National Conference of Bar Foundations, founded OBF’s fundraiser “Rock the Foundation – Lip Sync for Justice” and continued to move the OBF forward in its modernizing efforts. Thank you for making 2019 rock!
PRESIDENT’S AWARDS
Each year, the OBF Board of Trustees president recognizes outstanding board members who went above and beyond to support activities carried out by the OBF. This year, President Castillo selected Allen Hutson, Susan Shields and Nathan Richter as 2019 President’s Award recipients. In addition to active board participation throughout the year, each of these award recipients played an active role in the success of the “Rock the Foundation – Lip Sync for Justice” fundraiser. Nathan Richter even performed as a lip sync team contestant. The event raised over $26,000 for OBF grantees providing access to justice services.

OUTGOING BOARD OF TRUSTEES RECOGNITION
The OBF thanks Alan Souter, Martha Cordell, Amber Peckio Garrett, Susan Shields, Nathan Richter and Kaleb Hennigh for their service and dedication as OBF Trustees. From all of us at the OBF, we wish each of you the best in future endeavors! You will be greatly missed.

PASSING OF THE GAVEL
President Jennifer Castillo passed the OBF gavel to incoming President Patrick O’Hara Jr., whose term as president will begin Jan. 1, 2020. The OBF is looking forward to President O’Hara’s leadership as we head into the new year.

IT’S OFFICIALLY HOLIDAY season! Christmas lights, cocoa, friends and family collide for a joyous, yet chaotic, swirl of fun and festivities. In a matter of mere days, 2019 will officially be behind us and we will fully embrace a new year. The 2019 bar year culminated at the Annual Meeting in Oklahoma City Nov. 6-8. As always, it was a tremendous success full of valuable and informative CLE opportunities, great networking, food, friends and fun! The YLD was very active at this year’s Annual Meeting. After the President’s Reception, the YLD co-hosted the Midtown Pub Crawl. This fun event took lawyers from across the state on a trip via streetcar to Midtown’s O Bar, Kong’s Tavern, McNellie’s Pub and Fassler Hall. Likewise, the YLD participated in Thursday’s Out of This World Party by hosting the fan favorite costume contest. OBA members did not disappoint, bringing their A game in costumes ranging from alien to astronaut. With food, drinks, black lights and glow-in-the-dark games in the YLD hospitality suite, this party was truly out of this world! Special thanks to the Taxation Law Section for sponsoring this year’s suite.

In conjunction with Annual Meeting, the YLD held its regular monthly meeting Nov. 7 and the election results were announced. Congratulations to all of you! I am excited about the coming year! Newly elected members are:

- Chair: Jordan Haygood
- Vice Chair: April Moaning
- Treasurer: Dylan Erwin
- Secretary: Caroline Shaffer-Siex

Immediate Past Chair: Brandi Nowakowski
District 2: No candidate (this position will be appointed by the chair at the first meeting of 2020)
District 3: Laura Talbert
District 4: Taylor Venus
District 6: Caroline Shaffer-Siex
District 8: Tony Morales
At-Large (three seats available): Dylan Erwin, Clayton Baker and Bryan Lynch
At Large Rural (one seat available): Scott Cordell

In addition to announcing election results, this meeting provided me the opportunity to recognize and honor several individuals who have made special contributions to another successful year for the YLD. Awards were given to the Friend of the YLD, Fellow of the YLD, Officer of the Year and Director of the Year, as well as a special award to the Lee Coats Law Firm in Vinita.

The Friend of the YLD is awarded to a nonlawyer who has shown tremendous support to the YLD; this year’s Friend of the YLD was Laura Stone of the Communications Department.

The Fellow of the YLD is awarded to a lawyer who has practiced more than 10 years and been instrumental to YLD success; this year, Susan Damron, director of the CLE Department was selected as the Fellow of the YLD.

Officer of the Year was Dylan Erwin of Oklahoma City.

Director of the Year was Caroline Shaffer-Siex of Tulsa.

Lee Coats Law Firm was recognized for their support of the YLD and the Wills for Heroes project. Special thanks to Josh Lee and Cassandra Coats and their entire staff for hosting a wills event at their law office in Vinita. We could not have done it without them!

These individuals have been vital to the success of the YLD, and I am so thankful to each of them for their continued hard work and support. Congratulations to all!

Ms. Nowakowski practices in Shawnee and serves as the YLD chairperson. She may be contacted at brandi@stuartclover.com. Keep up with the YLD at www.facebook.com/yld.

DUSTIN ROWE NAMED TO OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT

Gov. Stitt named Tishomingo lawyer Dustin Rowe to the Oklahoma Supreme Court. Mr. Rowe succeeds Federal District Judge Patrick Wyrick in the District 2 seat, which includes 13 counties in southeastern Oklahoma.

“Mr. Rowe is an accomplished lawyer and dedicated Oklahoman who has an impressive legal background,” Gov. Stitt said. “His proven record in both his private practice and as a tribal court judge speaks to his qualifications to join the highest court in Oklahoma. Mr. Rowe’s reputation of fairness, passion toward the legal system and heart for his community is evident. I am confident he will serve our state with integrity in order to support and defend the state’s constitution and uphold the rule of law.”

Mr. Rowe was elected mayor of Tishomingo when he was 18 years old and served two terms. He has practiced law in Tishomingo since 2001, where he owns and manages Rowe Law Firm. He served as special judge of the Chickasaw Nation District Court from 2005-2011 and since 2011 was serving as district judge of the Chickasaw Nation District Court until the time of his appointment.

He is Johnston County Bar Association president and is admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court, Oklahoma Supreme Court, Chickasaw Nation Supreme Court and the United State District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of Oklahoma.

Mr. Rowe received his J.D. from the OU College of Law in 2001.

SAVE THE DATE! LEGISLATIVE READING DAY FEB. 1, 2020

The Oklahoma Legislature convenes in February and hundreds of bills will be prefiled. Much of the proposed legislation could affect the administration of justice, and some will undoubtedly affect your practice.

Join the OBA Legislative Monitoring Committee at 10 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, at the Oklahoma Bar Center as they identify top bills of interest to the OBA and your practice area. Plus, earn two hours of MCLE credit. Lunch will be provided. RSVP to Debbie Brink at debbieb@okbar.org if you’d like to attend.

IMPORTANT UPCOMING DATES

Don’t forget the Oklahoma Bar Center will be closed Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 24-25, in observance of Christmas. The bar center will also be closed Wednesday, Jan. 1, 2020, for New Year’s Day and Monday, Jan. 20, 2020, in observance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

ASPIRING WRITERS TAKE NOTE

We want to feature your work on “The Back Page.” Submit articles of 500 words or less related to the practice of law, or send us something humorous, transforming or intriguing. Poetry and photography are options too. Send submissions to OBA Communications Director Carol Manning, carolm@okbar.org.

in memoriam

Ret. Judge John M. Amick of Oklahoma City died Oct. 9. He was born Jan. 31, 1923, in Oklahoma City. Judge Amick was a member of ROTC during the bombing of Pearl Harbor and joined the Army Reserve following the event. He was placed on active duty on April 6, 1943, and remained abroad with the military for over a year after the war’s end. Upon returning to the United States, he entered law school at OU. After graduating, Judge Amick served three terms as county attorney for Grant County before entering private practice in Medford. In 1959, he was appointed as an assistant U.S. attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. After some time as an assistant attorney in Oklahoma County, Judge Amick was appointed as a county judge in 1968. He held that office until 1973, when he resigned from the bench to accept a faculty position at the OCU School of Law. Five years later, he won the district judge position for the 7th District and remained in that position until his retirement in 1998. Memorial contributions may be made to the Regional Food Bank of Oklahoma, Salvation Army or City Rescue Mission.

William H. “Bill” Castor of Edmond died Sept. 25. He was born Aug. 8, 1943, in Oklahoma City. Mr. Castor received his J.D. from the OU College of Law in 1968. He practiced law in Vinita for most of his career, but also practiced in Pryor and Tulsa. He was appointed by Oklahoma Supreme Court Justice Robert E. Lavender as an associate examiner for the Board of Bar Examiners and served in that position from 1979 to 1990.

Hugh Edwin Hood of Broken Arrow died Oct. 16. He was born Feb. 14, 1965, in Tulsa. Mr. Hood was a graduate of Broken Arrow High School and attended Oklahoma State University for his undergraduate studies. He received his J.D. from the TU College of Law in 1992. His legal career included time as an attorney for the Oklahoma Department of Human Services, partner of the Street Law Firm and attorney for the Oklahoma Indigent Defense System in southeastern Oklahoma. Mr. Hood was a major advocate of the OBA Lawyers Helping Lawyers Assistance Program. Memorial contributions may be made to the Hugh Hood Memorial Fund, c/o Bank of Oklahoma, P.O. Box 1300, Tulsa, 74102.

Donald R. Liles of Woodward died Aug. 29. He was born Nov. 6, 1937. Mr. Liles received his J.D. from the OU College of Law in 1966 and moved to Las Vegas to practice law. In 1977, he returned to Oklahoma, acting as the city attorney for Woodward and practicing privately. Memorial contributions may be made to the Plains Indians & Pioneer Museum of Woodward through Billings Funeral Home, 201 N. Main, Mooreland, 73852.

Robert B. Milsten of Oklahoma City died Oct. 6. He was born Nov. 6, 1932, in Tulsa. Mr. Milsten received his L.L.B. from the OU College of Law in 1956 and served as treasurer of the Phi Delta Phi fraternity during the 1955-56 school year. Mr. Milsten entered the U.S. Air Force where he served two years as a legal officer at Tinker Air Force Base. Upon release from active duty, Mr. Milsten began working as a tax attorney for the regional office of the International Revenue Service in Dallas, where he remained until

HOW TO PLACE AN ANNOUNCEMENT:

The Oklahoma Bar Journal welcomes short articles or news items about OBA members and upcoming meetings. If you are an OBA member and you’ve moved, become a partner, hired an associate, taken on a partner, received a promotion or an award, or given a talk or speech with statewide or national stature, we’d like to hear from you. Sections, committees, and county bar associations are encouraged to submit short stories about upcoming or recent activities. Honors bestowed by other publications (e.g., Super Lawyers, Best Lawyers, etc.) will not be accepted as announcements. (Oklahoma-based publications are the exception.) Information selected for publication is printed at no cost, subject to editing and printed as space permits.
