

My American dream is to become a scientist, who also is a concert master.

Laws give everybody at least one fair chance to do what they want.

For example, leaders can only be leaders for some years so that other people can have a chance. People can vote for leaders, they also have a chance to say who they think is best. When people don't obey the laws, they usually don't get as many chances, possibly none. It is fair to give people chances. In conclusion I think that laws give everybody a fair chance.
