

Why voting, helping others, and following laws makes our country strong

By adalynn goodman

When we vote, help others, and follow the laws, we make our country strong by fostering a stable, just, and reliable country. Voting helps our country by allowing citizens to choose their representatives, and to hold accountable for their decisions and actions. Community services, such as volunteering and community service, build connections, trust, and empathy among diverse groups of people.

When we follow laws, it prevents robbery and such more. The law safeguards individuals' freedom and liberty, such as freedom of speech and the right to a fair trial. It strengthens the US by establishing social order, and allowing anyone sentenced into trial with an attorney, no matter the cost, that they'll get one for their needs in trial after committing a crime such as robbery or theft. The ways that voting, helping others, and following laws keep us a free and noble country are just amazing! Hopefully, with the help of time, it will make us stronger than ever!
