

Following the American Dream

by Levi Alexander

The American dream isn't possible without fair laws protecting your jobs, inventions, and books. We need to have laws that help us respect others and listen to them. Voting prevents people from fighting.

To achieve the American dream there are fair laws that protect rights. One of the key laws to protect rights is universal education that gives you knowledge needed to achieve jobs you want like a doctor, engineer and other jobs. Another key law is private property protection so you can own a business or protect creative projects to make money. Copyright and patents are included in the constitution.

Another way to achieve the American dream is to follow laws and respect others. One way we could respect others is by listening to new ideas which requires freedom of speech. There is also the right to have the beliefs we want. Listening to new ideas means just because you don't like whoever is speaking you still listen to them and give them respect.

Voting is another way to follow the American dream. Voting helps keep a stable government and transition to power. We have self determination where we can choose how our government runs. Choosing how our government runs helps us not fight over who governs and how the government gets run.

We can work together to show respect. Even when we disagree we can listen and protect the right of others to speak. Washington managed to work with both Jefferson and Hamilton who disagreed profoundly on the role of the government. They worked together to establish the foundation of the United States and to make the world a better place.

We can follow in their footsteps by helping a school or a community be a better place. We can help with security. We can also say something if you see something bad. That helps prevent people getting hurt. We could also help teach kids so they can learn new things and hopefully succeed someday.

To achieve the American dream we need fair laws that protect rights. People follow laws to respect others. We need voting, to work together and show respect even when we disagree. Finally, there are ways to help a school or a community be a better place.
